

Travel Guide: Some of the Best Spots to discover in Silicon Valley

Silicon Valley is one of the top destinations in Southern California. This locale is the perch of mighty technical giants like Google, Intel and Apple and the home of their savvy employees. Since the growths of the tech industry continue even through the recession, the various towns and cities in the area have managed to survive the ravages of the difficult times. Today, Silicon Valley is a major destination if one wants to spend time to the US' most progressive locales. Here are some activities you can add to your itinerary if you want to spend a day and a half there.

Airport and Lodgings

If you want to fly to Silicon Valley, take the JetBlue plane that flies off from Kennedy Airport and land at the Mineta San Jose airport. You might need to rent a car to go places in Silicon Valley. However, if you love taking long walks and train rides, the area has a limited train service. For places to board, you can scope out the Avatar Hotel in Santa Clara and the Rosewood Sand Hill in located in Menlo Park.

Pick up a Glass at Sand Hill

Sand Hill is one of the major thoroughfares of Silicon Valley. One can expect to see the latest models of cars out there in succession – a testament to the prosperity of the locals. Seek out the Rosewood Sand Hill and get a table for the trendy Madera restaurant. While you're there listen in on the tech barons who wine and dine in the restaurant and probably pick up a lessons or two.
