

Top Bay Area Food Writers Reveal Candid Faves on KQED

Radio host Michael Krasny probed current food trends and dining out in the Bay Area during this "Restaurant Roundup" chat hosted yesterday on KQED. Herein we get the rare opportunity to hear SF Weekly's Jonathan Kauffman, Marcia Gagliardi of The Tablehopper, Stett Holbrook of Metro Silicon Valley and San Francisco Magazine's Jan Newberry speak casually about their favorite spots to eat and what exactly they like to order. Lucky for you, a talented Eater stenographer distilled this hour-long radio segment into usable take-aways for your future enjoyment.

Host Krasny moves on to the hotly debated subject of burgers.

Kauffman: Serpentine is the "juiciest burger I've ever had."

Gagliardi: North Beach's Don Pistos has a "transcendent burger" that's "all kinds of decadent" with bacon and onion cooked into the patty.

Holbrook: The Sand Hill burger at Madera is grilled over oak and the Rosewood Sand Hill Resort is a "beautiful restaurant and atmosphere" in which to eat it.
